Volunteer commitments

The Big Issue values the support and efforts of volunteers and offers them an amazing opportunity to learn new skills, contribute to special life changing programs and be part of an amazing national and international network of programs.

To ensure that the Big Issue and the volunteer both benefit from their participation an open and effective line of communication is required.

Volunteers should openly discuss the level of commitment they can make to the program and what they would like to achieve from their involvement.

That is, the level of time commit and the skills and interests they bring as volunteers.

Volunteers' Rights:

- To be heard

- To appropriate training

- To receive support and supervision

- To have job satisfaction

- Not to be exploited

- To be treated with respect
